Lawyer Strong: Your Blueprint for Stress Resilience

Paula Davis-Laack, Author & Entrepreneur

Change, complexity, and the 24/7 "always on" pace of work have increased stress for lawyers, and burnout has become a real concern. Resilience helps lawyers better adapt to these challenges and develop into agile leaders. Resilience skills enable higher performance and engagement, more cohesive relationships and teams, and more effective problem solving. Those qualities then help lawyers to manage stress in healthier ways, reframe challenges, and build a more collaborative and innovative mindset.

The Servant Leader

Chris De Santis, Specialist in Management and Organization Development

Intuitively we know what it takes to be effective as a leader. This session begins with a discussion of those traits and characteristics. Chris will supplement what we know intuitively with what the literatures tell us about leading and leadership. We'll close with a focus on the roles goal setting, feedback, and emotional intelligence play in distinguishing the good from the great, in not only leadership but in life.
